Joshua Narrow is a Research Associate with The Conafay Group, supporting both the non-dilutive funding and policy teams. He previously held a year-long internship with the company, where he assisted in the logistical operations of The Conafay Group's DC office as well as drafting policy memos for clients.

Mr. Narrow is currently pursuing his bachelor's degree in International Affairs and History at The George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs, with a concentration in global public health.

Prior to his joining The Conafay Group, Mr. Narrow gained experience in both the public and private sectors. In a six-month internship program at the United States Senate, he was responsible for directing constituent casework, attending Congressional hearings, and held the unique role of preparing a monthly jobs report for the Senator. Following this program, Mr. Narrow was hired as a content coordinator for a startup DC strategic communications firm, where he developed media strategies for a wide variety of companies, including one of the United States' largest human resources firms. He has also had the opportunity to provide analytical data to political campaigns on the local, state, and federal level.

Mr. Narrow brings his research and communications experience to The Conafay Group to assist in conducting in-depth policy analysis for clients as well as attending Congressional briefings and monitoring developments in healthcare policy and funding opportunities.
